“ The object of your affection can find time in her big busy schedule for three-hour mani-pedi-shampoo-style sessions but she cannot pencil you in for half an hour at Starbucks, alarm bells should be calling. If it seems like she can make time for everyone except you, then the message is actually, you are so far down in her food archipelago of concerns. She might not get to you in this lifetime. Time to give it up and jump back in the dating pool. Assuming your persistence pays away from and you manage to score a date, but she spends the time texting, admiring her nails or playing 'Angry Birds' about her android, she's really not into you.

When women sense potential in their date, they spend the time collecting information to file for future reference. So unless the story has been doing "Vanity Fair" recently, your date's inattention is a sure giveaway that it might be time to bring up to date your report on the relationship websites. When you're investing some alone time with her and she allows, even encourages, girl friends, kids, dogs and the pizza guy to interrupt, she probably has moved on but you just don't know it yet. An interested woman would value your time and effort together.

She Would Plan, Put Together and Relish These Special Times

If she's not showering you with the attention you deserve, it's time to cut your losses and go hang with the inventors and their Buds in their man caves. If she unfriends you on Facebook or perhaps won't respond to your friend requests on LinkedIn, that should be an obvious sign that you are not in the circle of trust, probably not even in the circle of interest. Refrain from writing that overwrought email. Focus your efforts on something productive. You call her and the number has been changed. You never got in which mass email advising everyone of her new contact information. No, it's not a glitch. It's intentional and she's not being mean to a person. You probably crossed the line between fatal fascination and criminal stalking some time back. You really need to get a grip and let this one go.

Talk about Yourself

Relationship is just about you as well as the potential companion. Thus, there is certainly no need to talk about the ex-wife unless you are going to get married again or children unless you have the intention of adding her to them. Your dates would still want to know more about you, just like they do with the rest of the men out there, divorced or individual.
